

Jordan Reyes

jordan@example.com | LinkedIn | (510) 555-0143 | Oakland, CA

I run growth like a portfolio: fund what compounds, kill what doesn't, write down why. 11 years growing revenue across fintech, DTC, and agency-side; the last four building lifecycle and partner channels for a payments platform, the same motion solar financing runs on. Once turned off an entire paid social budget for 60 days to prove organic and email could hold CAC. It held.

EXPERIENCE

Senior Marketing Manager | Brightline Pay | Feb 2022 - Jan 2026

Series C fintech - payments platform for mid-market finance teams | San Francisco, CA

Owned growth and lifecycle for the SMB product line. Managed a team of four across lifecycle, paid, and content. Role eliminated in the January 2026 restructure that cut 40% of go-to-market.

- Rebuilt the lifecycle email program from six static campaigns into a behavior-triggered system in Braze. Influenced $2.1M in new ARR within nine months of launch (Braze-attributed, first-touch on activation).
- Cut blended CAC 23% over two years by moving budget out of branded search and into partner referrals and lifecycle.
- Raised week-one activation from 34% to 51% by rewriting the onboarding sequence around the customer's first successful payment instead of the feature tour.
- Ran the experimentation program across signup, pricing, and onboarding. Kept a public test log, losers included. The losers were more popular.
- Built the weekly growth review that finance, product, and sales all attended. Kept it to 30 minutes, which is why they attended.
- Owned the paid budget through two planning cycles. Defended it line by line with finance and gave back the lines I couldn't defend.

Growth Lead | Copper & Pine | Mar 2019 - Feb 2022

DTC home goods brand, seed through Series A | Oakland, CA

First marketing hire. Owned acquisition, retention, and the email program end to end.

- Shut off the entire paid social budget for 60 days to test whether organic and email could hold CAC. It held. The board memo explaining why became the backbone of the Series A narrative.
- Grew the email list from 9,000 to 74,000 with a kitchen-audit quiz and a referral loop. No purchased lists, no giveaway spikes that churn out in a month.
- Lifted repeat purchase rate from 21% to 34% by rebuilding the post-purchase flow around product care and reordering rather than discounts.
- Built the first attribution model in a spreadsheet. It was wrong in ways we understood, which beat being wrong in ways we didn't.
- Launched the Hearth cast-iron line: waitlist email strategy, founder story placement, zero paid support. Sold out the first run in 11 days.
- Hired and trained the brand's first two marketers, one of whom now runs the whole function.

Strategist, promoted from Account Manager | Meridian West | Jun 2015 - Feb 2019

Mid-size independent marketing agency | San Francisco, CA

Started on accounts, moved to strategy in year two.

- Ran channel and campaign strategy for eight retainer clients across consumer goods, hospitality, and B2B software.
- Wrote the media briefs, ran the retros, and learned to defend a budget line to a client CFO before turning 27.
- Rebuilt the agency's client reporting template around outcomes instead of impressions. Adopted across every account within two quarters.
- Kept the two longest-tenured accounts in the building through an agency rebrand and three team turnovers.

SELECTED WINS

- Lifecycle rebuild (Brightline Pay). Six tired campaigns became a triggered system tied to what customers actually did. $2.1M ARR influenced in nine months (Braze-attributed, first-touch on activation). Still running at steady state: 14 triggered flows across five segments, owned by a marketer I trained.
- The 60-day paid social kill (Copper & Pine). The test nobody wanted to run. CAC held, the budget stayed dead for two more quarters, and the freed spend funded the email program behind the repeat-purchase gains. The write-up carried the Series A story.
- The test log. Every experiment written up, wins and losers, readable by anyone. Copied by two other teams, then adopted by product for feature experiments. Cheap to run, hard to argue with.

SKILLS

Channels: Lifecycle and email, referral and partner programs, paid search and social, SEO and content

Tools: Braze, Klaviyo, Segment, Amplitude, Looker, Google Ads, Meta Ads, Webflow, working SQL

Practice: Experiment design, CAC and LTV modeling, funnel analysis, budget planning with finance, hiring and managing small teams

EDUCATION

San Francisco State University - BA, Communication Studies, 2014